With the little money he had put by for a rainy day he bought tickets for himself and family for Brazil. South America, where he has relatives living.

Arriving at Bremen one of his children was taken sick and was in bed for two months.

On his arrival at Berlin an agent, who represented himself as doing business for the firm of Louis Fries & Co., of Hamburg, took Skupka's tickets from him, telling him that he had not live on for nothing. The agent then gave him tickets for himself and family to New York.

The members of the family are in a nealthy to New York.

Gen. O Bettre said he believed the Russian's story, for he knew that they wored so quietly that it was next to impossible to discover them. He also said that an endeavor had been made to find out whether Louis Fries & Co. had offices here, but that none had so far been discovered.
